John W. Counts

"For these images I used a unique process where I print images onto polaroid film with a vivitar slide printer. I made the original images on transparency film and had them developed, and then I take several individual slides and filters and expose them one by one onto the original Polaroid 669 peel-apart film stock. I then physically manipulate the print while it's developing to get a range of textures and tones. There is no photoshop manipulation except for scanning, slight contrast and brightness adjustments to match the original print, and, as always, dust removal."
